Cafeteria Man* is a 65-minute documentary about Baltimore City Public Schools' move toward a more nutritious and sustainable food program. The film follows Tony Geraci, the food service director, as he gradually transformed the school food from pre-plated and processed to locally grown and freshly prepared. The film offers an inspiring portrayal of the possibilities and challenges of transforming school food.

The screening will be followed by a discussion about food in Montgomery County Public Schools

What people are saying about Cafeteria Man:

"Cafeteria Man takes a feel-good approach to advocating for healthier, and more local school lunches."

– Huffington Post

"A clear-eyed look at transformative change in school food, permeated by an infectious sense of possibility."

– Jan Poppendieck, Author, *Free For All: Fixing School Food In America

"A compelling and original wake-up call. Cafeteria Man shows us that improving school food isn't about nutrients and recipes — but vision." – Jane Black, Food Writer

"A documentary about one determined individual's battle against a rigid status quo, filmed with honesty, compassion and humor." – Organic Connections Magazine

"Real Food for Kids - Montgomery" is a grass-roots, parent advocacy group promoting whole, delicious, fresh foods in the Montgomery County Public Schools
